The

DOLL MAN

His name was Lazarus and, in ancient times, it was said that such a man was raised from the dead!

But Darrel Dane, as the DOLL MAN, mighty mite of crime-busting, never dreamed that he would see a re-enactment of the action in modern times when his trail crossed that of The MAN WHO RETURNED FROM THE DEAD!

It isn't often that we find Darrel Dane and his fiancée, Martha Roberts, amid such luxurious surroundings

OH, DARREL, YOU REALLY SHOULDN'T HAVE BROUGHT ME TO SUCH AN EXPENSIVE PLACE!

WHY NOT?

AFTER ALL, IT ISN'T OFTEN THAT YOU HAVE A BIRTHDAY! AND I WANT THIS TO BE ONE YOU'LL REMEMBER!

YOU'RE SWEET, DARREL!

WHO'S THAT COMING IN?

THAT'S ENOCH LAZARUS, THE GANG CZAR! LOOKS LIKE HE'S ENJOYING HIS BRIEF HOUR OF TRIUMPH, DOESN'T IT?

HE JUST RAN TRIGGER MAYO AND HIS GANG OUT OF TOWN! KILLED MOST OF THEM, AND THE REST ARE SUPPOSED TO BE IN HIDING!

HE DOESN'T SEEM LIKE A KILLER!

IT'S HARD TO TELL FROM APPEARANCES! HE'S A KILLER, ALL RIGHT! ANY DAY NOW THEY'LL FIND TRIGGER MAYO'S BODY FLOATING IN A RIVER...

OR WILL THEY? HERE COMES TRIGGER MAYO NOW! THERE'S GOING TO BE TROUBLE!

YOU ASKED FOR IT, LAZARUS! NOW YOU'RE GOING TO GET IT!

OOOF!

UGHH!

GIRL FRIEND? IS THERE SOMEONE ELSE AS SMALL AS YOU?

PEOPLE SPOKE TO HIM WHEN HE CAME IN! HE SEEMED TO HAVE MANY FRIENDS!

WHE-EW! ANOTHER SECOND AND I'D HAVE BEEN PART OF THE CITY'S SEWAGE SYSTEM!

BEING SMALL HAS PROBLEMS OF ITS OWN! I'D BETTER BECOME DARREL DANE BEFORE I GET INTO ANY MORE TROUBLE!

Moments later....

WHAT HAPPENED, OFFICER?

TRIGGER MAYO WENT CRAZY WHILE I WAS TAKING HIM TO PRISON-- THOUGHT LAZARUS, THE MAN HE KILLED, WAS AFTER HIM! HE EVEN HEARD LAZARUS LAUGHING!

TRIGGER WAS CRAZY AS A BEDBUG, OF COURSE! BUT HE MIGHT HAVE GOT AWAY, IF HE HADN'T BEEN DELAYED BY THE DOLL MAN!

TRIGGER MAYO WASN'T AN UNDULY SENSITIVE MAN! HE MAY HAVE HEARD SOMETHING...

IT'S A WILD HUNCH! BUT I'LL DO A LITTLE CHECKING ON THE LATE ENOCH LAZARUS!

In the office of the Daily Press....

HMM! I NEVER KNEW LAZARUS WAS A POWER IN CROOKED POLITICS! THIS CLIPPING MAY EXPLAIN A LOT!

ELAINE CARTER WAS LAZARUS' GIRL FRIEND! SHE WAS PRESENT AT HIS MURDER, TOO! I THINK I'LL PAY HER A VISIT...

DOLL MAN

I CAN PULL THE NOOSE TIGHT, TOO! THAT MAKES THE FIRST CASE IN HISTORY OF A SPIDER BEING HUNG!

FREE AT LAST! I WANT A RETURN ENGAGEMENT WITH LITTLE MISS MURDER!

Moments later...

SHE'S GONE! BUT THIS LATEST ENTRY TELLS ME WHERE I CAN FIND HER! LITTLE MISS MURDER KEEPS ACCURATE RECORDS...

...FOR WHICH I'M PROPERLY GRATEFUL!

At this moment, on a roof top opposite the Emporia Fur Company...

THEY'RE UNLOADING THE TRUCKS, MISS MURDER!

NOW IS THE TIME, DUKE!

LET 'EM HAVE IT!

WHAT'S HAPP...
AHHHH!

BANG!

BANG! RA-TA-TAT!
RA-TA-TAT!

Martha

Talk about having a sweet tooth! Martha Roberts couldn't guess what strange events would follow when she won a box of bonbons! Suddenly it seemed as if everyone wanted to share her good luck... or else!

RETRIBUTION

CALVIN SELLS, state game warden, stood and rubbed his stubby chin as his eyes roved over the prime buck deer that lay at his feet. He had seen the deer leap and crash in the underbrush just a moment before. But he had heard no shot. At first he thought he had suddenly gone deaf. But he passed that up when he heard a bluejay squawk nearby.

"No, something had killed that buck. But what? There was no arrow protruding from its body. He had heard no shot.

Ah, maybe the feller was using a silencer! Cal bent down and went over the deer, rolled him over and explored the other side. No bullet hole.

"Now what the heck you make of that, Cal?" he asked himself, speaking to himself as he always did when he was deeply perplexed.

There was no answer forthcoming.

Could the deer have been suddenly stricken by some disease that snuffed him out in this fashion? He could see the buck's great eyes, wide open, staring, glazed. His mouth was half open. A few blades of grass still clung to its wet lips.

Cal got to his feet and rubbed his jaw again. Things were not as they should be in these woods. No, and he had been here wardening nigh onto eighteen years.

Cal picked up his rifle and strode down the trail, muttering to himself. He couldn't seem to get that dead buck out of his mind. The wide open eyes. The rigid tautness of the body, even though it had died but a couple of minutes before he reached it.

Near a broad stream, where many of the wild things came to drink, Cal halted in deep bushes. He would just take a look at the animals coming down to take their evening guzzle. Cal always liked to watch them at this duty. They stepped so gently, acted so wary, eyeing each other. Yet somehow all feuds were off at the watering place. Mountain lion and deer often stood close to each other to drink. It was one of the strange riddles of the woods.

A leaf whispered not far off, and a great black bear waddled out on the bank. He lifted his shaggy head, tested the wind with his shiny nose, and then plunged his face in the cold water. Cal could plainly hear the deep lapping, the satisfied grunt.

The bear, having quaffed his fill, lifted his head again, presenting a perfect of Nature's wild things taking delight in its surroundings.

Then——

The bear gave a strange grunt, reared upon its great hind legs, and toppled over to lay still. Cal leaped out of the brush and stood beside the bear. The huge animal didn't move a muscle. It was dead.

This was too much. Cal cast quick looks around, but could see nothing. The pale blue haze of early autumn clung over the forest. Autumn's stillness hung over everything. Not a sound could be heard.

Then Cal got himself an idea. Perhaps the water in the stream was poisoned! He went back into the bushes and took up his stance to watch. Soon a tiny striped squirrel came slinking down to the edge of the water, looked around, and began drinking. It pirouetted a bit on the edge of the stream, licked its small chops and chattered sharply.

Cal made a slight noise. The squirrel ran up a small tree, to sit scolding him on a lower branch. Cal watched for fully ten minutes, while the little animal's antics grew more ludicrous—as all squirrels will perform when humans are watching them. Regular little actors. But Cal knew by this time that the stream's water was not poisoned.

Here was a poser. What was happening to the animals that they dropped dead as if from nothing?

A fat woodchuck made his appearance on the stream's edge. He paid no attention to anything; just stuck his snout into the liquid and began drinking. He had scarcely lifted his head when his body turned a complete somersault and he landed flat on his back—stone dead.

Cal stood as if he himself were turned to stone. He felt the hackles on his neck rise, and a coldness shot through him. Here was a problem for someone who knew more than he did. He turned quietly and made off through the woods.

In his cabin there was a small radio and a telephone that connected with headquarters. In a moment he was in excited conversation with the chief, telling him exactly what he had witnessed. The chief at first chuckled, accusing Cal of having something stronger than water, then he sobered when he realized that his best warden never indulged.

"Okay, Cal," he said. "I'll send up someone in the morning. In the meantime, keep your eye out."

Cal hung up the receiver and took a deep breath. Then he set about preparing his supper.

The death of the deer and bear and woodchuck kept filling his mind. The coffee ran over. His flapjacks burned. He forgot to feed his pet skunk, but it reminded him by leaping onto the table and upsetting the sugar bowl.

Here, thought Cal, I gotta come out of this thing. Wait till Waters gets here in the morning. He'll know what to do. Waters is a smart feller.

When Waters, a detective for the forest service, arrived at eight the next morning, he listened to the full account of what had happened.

"Let's mosey out and take a peek at that deer and—whatever else you saw killed," he said.

Cal led him first to the deer. It still lay where it had fallen.

"Hm," said the dick, turning the stiff animal over, "it has a strange look about the eyes. No marks on its body at all."

The bear proved the same thing, as did the woodchuck.

"I swear," said Waters, "this thing has me baffled. Can't figger it out at all. Death must have been instantaneous in all cases. But death from what?"

Cal told him about his idea of the water being poisoned, and his quick discovery that it wasn't.

"Poison wouldn't work that fast, especially diffused as it would be in a wide running stream. Anyway, there was the squirrel to prove it."

"Yeah," Cal relapsed into silence.

"We'd better do some looking around," said Waters. "You lead on. Take it easy. We'll just look."

Cal started off, his expression moody. He didn't like to see wildlife slaughtered needlessly. He loved animals of all kinds. If this were the doings of some man—Cal gripped his big fists and growled low in his throat.

Suddenly Cal stopped and pointed. Just off the game trail lay the body of a giant moose, its antlers a vast spread of magnificence. It was stiff in death, with not a mark upon its beautiful body.

Cal swore roundly and tears came into his wizened eyes. "Oh, if I could get my hands on the dirty varmint—"

Waters said, "But maybe it isn't the doings of anybody at all, Cal. It may be some strange malady that's attacking the larger animals."

Crash! Both men jumped. A huge tawny mountain lion slashed down through the branches and flopped into a young tamarack not ten feet away, then slid to the ground. It was stone dead.

"This ties it!" exclaimed the detective. "Come on!"

Waters plunged up the trail, Cal close behind him. Neither knew what he intended doing. Both demanded action of some kind.

It began to drizzle as they forged ahead. The forest grew darker, but they stuck to the trail.

Soon they routed a herd of fat mule deer. As these animals were then protected, they showed little fear of mankind. They simply lifted their graceful heads and stared at the two men, then went on about their grazing.

There was a sudden commotion in the bushes across the little clearing. Someone, or something, had stumbled over a root. But no. Cal pointed. Both men saw a shiny tube poking through the brush. It wavered, lowered. The rain was coming down now in a fine mist that wet things through in no time.

The tube appeared again. And suddenly there was a vast sheet of blue flame that enveloped almost the entire glade. It knocked Cal and Waters flat, sent the deer scampering off at a great rate.

When he was able, Cal got to his feet and helped Waters up. Then they raced across the glade. A man lay at its edge. He was burned almost to a crisp. The shattered wreckage of a strange device was clutched in his charred hands. Waters pried it loose.

"An electric rifle," he gasped. "My gosh! What a weapon! No wonder there was no sound. It killed with a bolt of electricity. Simply electrocuted anything it hit."

"Eh?" said Cal, dazed from the shock he had received.

Waters explained again. Cal went into a torrent of swearing. "Served him right, the thing blowing up in his face, the hateful varmint!" he stormed.

"I think," said Waters, "that Nature had a hand in his undoing. You see, he forgot that rain was a carrier of electricity. When he pulled the trigger, he electrocuted himself."

The papers in the man's pockets were charred beyond recognition, as he himself was. So they just buried the whole thing, gun and man, in an unmarked hole in the woods. It was better that way.

THE DOLL MAN

Play Ball! It's a joyous shout that greets the start of every baseball game! For everybody loves the national pastime...the blur of a speeding fast ball, the crack of a bat, the zinging smack of horsehide in a leather glove! Here is the tale of a different kind of criminal, a man who knew how to use the teamwork of sports in a more sinister pursuit...and who put two strikes over on The Doll Man before the mighty mite solved the baffling delivery of

The BASEBALL BANDITS!

A familiar scene...with the count three and two on the batter, the pitcher wings through with a payoff pitch!

But we're certain that you've never witnessed a baseball game in a more unusual setting ...

STRIKE THREE!

NICE PITCHING!

THEY NEVER EVEN SAW THE BALL!

TEAMWORK DID IT! YOU BACKED ME UP ON EVERY PLAY!

OKAY, MEN! THE GAME'S OVER! BACK TO YOUR CELLS!

I SLAMMED A TRIPLE! I'LL BETCHA HY TERRISS COULDN'T HAVE HIT THAT BALL ANY FARTHER!

WE'RE GOOD! NO TEAM'S BEATEN US IN THREE YEARS! YOU KNOW WHY, SLUGGER?

BECAUSE YOU'RE SUCH A GOOD PITCHER. HUH, SPADE?

NO! BECAUSE WE PLAY TOGETHER ... AS A UNIT! IT'S WHAT THEY CALL TEAMWORK IN SPORTS! AND THAT GIVES ME AN IDEA!

CRIMINALS ARE CAUGHT BECAUSE THEY USUALLY WORK ALONE! EVEN WHEN THEY'VE GOT A PARTNER, THEY NEVER PRACTICE TEAMWORK ... THEY DON'T KNOW HOW! BUT WE DO! IF IT WORKS IN BASEBALL, WHY WON'T IT WORK IN CRIME, TOO?

Several nights later, the quiet of the prison is broken by a shrill alarm

THE SIREN! IT'S A PRISON BR...
UHHH!

STRIKE! RIGHT ACROSS THE FOREHEAD!

On the highway not far from the prison...

WHY ARE YOU STOPPING?

THE PRISON SIREN! DON'T YOU HEAR IT?

TAKE THE CAR AND GO HOME, MARTHA! I DON'T WANT YOU AROUND IF THERE'S TROUBLE, BUT THE DOLL MAN MAY BE NEEDED!

ALL RIGHT, DARREL! BUT PLEASE BE CAREFUL!

Quickly Darrel Dane compresses the molecules of his body to become the tiny Doll Man!

THIS BULLETPROOF CAR WAS WAITING FOR US! STACKED WITH GUNS, TOO! SEE HOW EASY TEAMWORK MAKES IT?

HERE I COME!

SPADE SOLENKO... AND HIS PRISON PALS!

LET'S NOT TOSS ANY LEAD! I'D RATHER TOSS PUNCHES!

THE DOLL MAN!

But the Doll Man's hurtling fall is broken by the yielding branches of a small bush.

GROANN! IF I COULD FIND A SPOT THAT WASN'T ALREADY BLACK AND BLUE, I'D PINCH MYSELF TO SEE IF I WAS ALIVE!

THAT WAS A NEAT DOUBLE PLAY THEY WORKED ON ME! IT ADDS UP TO NO RUNS... SEVERAL HITS... AND MY ERROR!

BUT THIS GAME ISN'T OVER! MY INNING WILL COME AGAIN, AND I'LL BAT SPADE SOLENKO AND HIS PALS RIGHT BACK INTO A PRISON CELL!

Meanwhile, Spade Solenko isn't wasting any time!

YOU SAW HOW TEAMWORK BEAT THE DOLL MAN! NONE OF US COULD DO IT ALONE! TOMORROW WE START PLAYING BALL IN THE BIG TIME!

THAT'S OKAY WITH US!
